LETTER TO THE COMMUNITY

The mission of the Jenkins Foundation is simple: to improve the health of Greater Richmond. We do this in partnership with organizations that work diligently to serve the least fortunate among us. In the past year alone, the Foundation awarded grants totaling $1.7 million for essential care of the underserved and for programs that encourage a stronger, safer community.

Since its inception in 1995, the Jenkins Foundation has worked closely with many nonprofit partners to create improved access to health services along with an efficient delivery system. Our grants are in direct response to the changing needs of our community. Through our own research and with the help of our peers and partners, we stay abreast of changing demographics, emerging approaches to community health and the various ways in which public policy affects our work.

Thank you to all who help make our mission a reality. Our board is proud the Jenkins Foundation has evolved into a significant resource for health philanthropy in our community.

In 2015, The Jenkins Foundation awarded a total of $1.73 million to local health-related organizations, primarily to improve access to care for the underserved. Our grants also support health education, companionship for older adults, trauma-informed care for individuals experiencing violence and much more.

Support from the Jenkins Foundation made it possible for children and their families to receive mental health services when they might not otherwise. Elk Hill provides behavioral and emotional interventions when problems first appear and when youth are most responsive to treatment, rather than waiting for them to experience multiple failures.

For 16 years, The Jenkins Foundation has shared our vision to provide a free clinic in Goochland County. Their continued support has impacted the quality of life for more than 5,000 low-income Goochland County residents who benefit from our health care and basic human needs programs.
